CALL FOR PAPERS

Constructivist and socio-cultural approaches regard the social contexts an essential precondition to foreign language acquisition. Therefore changing patterns in the social development are directly related to their teaching and learning methodology. At this stage, fast development of information technologies and the increase of the possibilities to use online teaching and learning facilities, including social media, represent new challenges and demands for researchers of language learning, teaching and communication. Furthermore, over the last two years, since the break of the pandemics caused by Covid-19, the Albanian education system and many others in the region have had to align themselves quickly to the demands of the new reality, where learners and teachers had to switch to a new system of virtual teaching and learning. Adjusting to this new reality has not been challenged by the lack of digital competences, the lack of proper infrastructure and little awareness on how to approach issues of involvement and assessment.

Considering the above, the aim of the conference is to bring together researchers, academic staff, educational experts, teachers-in-service, scholar students, alumni and stakeholders, to share and exchange their experiences, innovative ideas, and research results on aspects of e-learning and linguistic acquisition, as well as to discuss the challenges encountered and practical solutions adopted. The focus is to enhance new perspectives on interaction-based methodology, as a cornerstone of many socially oriented approaches to foreign language teaching and learning.

CONFERENCE TOPICS of interest include, but are not limited to:

- Virtual learning challenges during the pandemic COVID-19
- Teaching and learning foreign languages in a virtual context
- Digital competence – a key element of language acquisition
- Quality assurance of E-language learning
- E-learning; a tool to internationalization of higher education
- Language e-learning platforms; media and communication
- University ICT infrastructure enhancement
